

When I dated Abram, I was at a time in my life when I truly felt like he might have been the one. I was enamoured, and I told him I adored him multiple times. I did truly feel that I was in the wrong when the argument happened, and this was because I had a horrible experience before with another man who did horrible things to me. I had told him about this, and I thought, “Surely, he wouldn’t do the same to me.” But I suppose the need for sex was more than his need to be loved.

It makes me sick to my stomach that this will forever be a blunder or an obstacle for him, but for me, it was the shattering of my very world. It may sound dramatic, yes, but he gave me graphic nightmares, sent me into a psychosis, and genuinely made me hate even looking at myself in the mirror. He talked about hating himself, wanting to die, and whatnot, like he was the only one going through this, as if it affected him more than me. As we saw in the video, he is incapable of seeing that this has also hurt me. He recognizes this; he knows, but he can only feel the guilt it gave him. He could not comprehend that it hurt me more than it hurt him. And he had the audacity to say, “I forgive you”, “You are absolved”. Needless to say, he’s a coward. And no amount of tears, guilt, or sadness will make up for the hell he put me through.

I loved him. I loved him with all my heart, and he couldn’t bring himself to love me too. He was obsessed with me, my body, and how it sexually aroused him. And I was foolish enough to pour 5-6 months of my time into him, thinking that he cared about me as much as I did. I wish I could put into words how horribly he affected me. I cannot bring myself to believe it when he says he is sorry. Because he only feels bad about experiencing the consequences of his very actions. And he only sees them as consequences. Not as real things that come from what he did. He only views them through the lens of them being his mistakes, not truly fathoming the idea that this was one of the worst days of my life.

Needless to say, this makes me really emotional. I hope he rots in hell. I can't bring myself to forgive him, even if I said I have. I cannot. I can't even hear his voice without wanting to see him burning in the brimstone. And if saving him meant saving mankind, we'd be going extinct. I'd rather eat shit and enjoy it than feel sympathy for him. I loved him. With all my heart, I loved him, and I would've bled blue just so that when he stabbed me, he'd see a color he liked. I hope he DOES never love again. But knowing him, he's becoming an incel because "he can't be in a relationship for the safety of others". He doesn't want to be better, and he won't. Dickwad. Scum on the sole of my shoes and degenerate above all else. I loved him, and he didn't give a shit.

I digress. As you can see, there is no way to separate feelings from his conversation. All in all, I hope he burns in hell, and even if he lived 500 lives feeling guilty about what he did, it would never be enough. If I see him, it's on sight.

-Ketsua